Geode

RUG

Geode is a rug made entirely by hand using the hand-tufting technique in HESSENTIA's artisan workshops. The handcrafted process makes each piece unique and connects the textile surface directly to the artisans' skill.

The manual process introduces subtle differences from one piece to another: each rug therefore retains traces of the handwork through which it was created, rather than appearing completely uniform.

Tufting transforms yarn into a textured presence that changes the perception of the floor. Texture and density help define the rug's character and the way it relates to the surrounding pieces of furniture.

The surface responds subtly to light, revealing variations and transitions that make it less uniform. Subtle variations in the pile give the rug a tactile feeling, introducing a softer quality into the composition.

Geode is available in configurations with different proportions, allowing it to suit both more intimate ambiences and spaces where the rug covers a larger area.

Geode expresses HESSENTIA's exploration of textile design through the value of handcraftsmanship: tufting builds the surface, while the inevitable variations of the artisanal process give each piece its own distinct character.

HESSENTIA can customise this item to meet the requirements of your project. Some limitations apply.
