For HESSENTIA, Eureka is a sculptural armchair with an essential, decisive language inspired by the expressive strength of Brutalist architecture. Inclined planes, clean geometries and compact volumes come together in a refined composition, transforming the seating into an architectural presence within the space.

The structure develops through continuous surfaces that define back, seat and supports as parts of a single volume. The inclination of the planes introduces movement into the geometry and creates a precise balance between visual solidity, proportions and function.

The fiberglass finish of Eureka exploits the formal freedom of the material to achieve complex shapes, continuous junctions and precisely shaped surfaces. The workmanship and hand finishing enhance the character of the armchair while keeping the relationship between design, material and Italian craftsmanship clearly legible.

The apparent severity of the geometries is balanced by a seat designed to accommodate the body. This contrast between formal rigour and comfort defines Eureka's identity and distinguishes it from traditional upholstered armchairs.

Designed for contemporary interiors, residential projects and hospitality spaces, this armchair does not simply complete the ambience but organizes it through volumes, inclinations and visual solids. Entirely Handmade in Italy, Eureka interprets the armchair as a meeting point between furniture design, formal research and architectural sensitivity.
