Nova is a contemporary console defined by the meeting of marble and metal, materials that shape both its structure and the perception of its proportions. The design recalls the distinctive features of the eponymous collection, translating them into a slender, horizontally oriented item.

The marble top is thinned around its perimeter and has rounded corners. This craftsmanship gives the stone visual lightness and softens the outline, revealing the natural veining, colours and depth of the surface.

The thin edge guides the eye along the top, making the weight of the material less apparent while preserving its intrinsic look.

The metal base is one of the recurring elements of Nova collection. Its refined design supports the top and is enhanced by a vertical marble slab, enclosed within a slender metal frame that highlights its textured handmade decoration.

Marble thus appears in two different orientations: as the horizontal surface of the top and as a vertical element within the base. Veining runs through the composition, creating material continuity between parts that perform different functions.

Nova balances stone and metal through thicknesses, curves and directions. Marble retains its natural strength, while the structure defines its outline and appears to lighten its presence, expressing HESSENTIA's exploration of fine stones and contemporary Made in Italy design.
