Within the HESSENTIA world, Kiro is a sofa with generous proportions, characterized by rounded shapes that involve both the backand the seat. The product is available in a version with armrest and in an open configuration, allowing the lateral perception of the volume and the relationship between the sofa and the surrounding space to be modified.

The base introduces a material component clearly distinguishable from the upholstered section and is available in solid ash wood with an open-pore finish or in ziricote wood veneer. The presence of wood follows the horizontal development of the sofa and creates a contrast between the natural expressiveness of the material and the softness of the upholstery.

One of the design's distinctive elements is the segmented upholstery, which articulates the volume and contributes to the sofa's decisive character. The workmanship reinforces the perception of the rounded shapes through a rhythmic, three-dimensional surface.

Kiro can be placed either against a wall or at the centre of a room. Its substantial dimensions allow it to take on a central role within the interior, while the continuity of the curves enables the product to relate naturally to the other elements of the living area.

This sofa is available in leather or fabric upholstery. The possibility of choosing configuration and upholstery allows the design to adapt to contemporary living interiors of different sizes and characteristics.

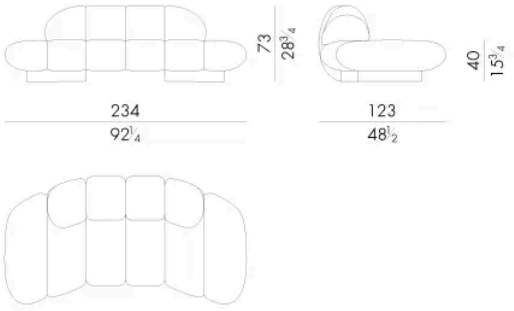

Kiro therefore combines segmented upholstery, rounded shapes and selected woods, building its identity through the contrast between soft volume the base.
